Most Successful Dance Held Friday Evening in Temperance Hall by Girls' Institute Club.

(Review Correspondent)

KEATING, Oct. 28. — A dance that was well conducted, well attended, and altogether highly satisfactory, was held at the Temperance hall, on Friday evening, under the auspices of the Girls' Institute club. The decorations, combining various Hallowe'en emblems, wild rose berries, and paper festoons, were tastefully arranged and lent a festive air which added much to the pleasure of the guests. A fortune-telling booth—where the mysteries of the future were revealed by Mrs. Gurney—proved a popular attraction, while the fruit-punch, dispensed by some of the Women's Institute members, found ready sale. A pretty feature was the serpentine dance and by way of variety a stag waltz was announced. Mr. Ned Richardson and partner being awarded first prize for the most graceful exhibition of dancing. The supper was planned to suit the most exacting taste, and included a large variety of dainty viands. Hunt's three-piece orchestra provided the latest dance hits and dancing was continued until an early hour.

A dance will be held at the Keating hall on Friday evening, Nov. 14, details of which will be announced later.

On November 12 the Union church choir will give a concert in the Temperance hall, when it is planned to present a pageant of Canada. Selections from Canadian songs will be sung, and this affair promises to be quite up to the usual high standard set by previous concerts.

The Tug "Atter Boy" Stuck on Rock for 36 Hours in Active Pass

(Review Correspondent)

MAYNE ISLAND, Oct. 28.—The unmarked rock opposite Helen Point has again been the cause of trouble to the shipping going through Active Pass en route to Vancouver. The "Atter Boy" a tow boat was delayed 36 hours recently, landing on this rock and remaining there until pulled off by the "Radius." Capt. Atter was on his way to Vancouver. The state of this rock has been several times drawn to the attention of the authorities it being especially dangerous to small craft who keep out of the tide—the tract of big ships. The shadow cast by Mount Sutil makes it almost impossible to tell the distance from the shore. Luckily the weather was calm or there might have been another marine loss.

VICTIMS OF THE UNSPEAKABLE TURK

Some fifty thousand Armenian orphans owe their lives to the generosity of the English-speaking peoples. Great Britain, Canada, Australia and the United States have for some time past co-operated in the sending of money, food, and clothing for the relief of the 200,000 orphan or destitute children which the war has left as a legacy to Armenia.

During the war nearly one million of our Armenian allies perished through war, deportation and massacre. After hostilities ceased the Armenians, relying upon the pledge of the Allied governments that the future of Armenia should be decided upon the principle of self-determination, returned to their homes in the interior of Turkey. Their hopes were disappointed, Armenia was handed back to Turkey and the massacres and deportation occurred again. Since the order has gone forth that all Christians must leave Turkey, refugees have been arriving by the thousands at the sea ports in a pitiable condition from exposure, hunger and disease.

It is estimated that there are 200,000 orphan or destitute children, without home or country of their own. Fifty thousand are being properly cared for in the orphanages which the relief organizations have provided. The rest, herded in refugee camps under indescribable conditions, are being given some measure of relief. In one instance the funds of the relief organizations were so limited that all that could be done for the refugees was to buy fields of grass for them and turn them in to graze like so many cattle.

During the next few months a special effort is to be made by the Canadian Armenian Near East Relief in order that the many children still uncared for may survive the winter. The British Columbia committee has as its officers, Major C. C. Owen, chairman; Rev. Alexander Thomson, secretary; and Mr. W. H. Malkin, treasurer. Please make out all cheques payable to the Canadian Armenian Near East Relief, 223

CONCERT PARTY COMING NEXT WEEK

The concert which is to be held on Tuesday, Nov. 4, in Berquist's hall, under the auspices of the North Saanich Women's Institute will be one of exceptional merit. Mr. Edward Parsons, leader of the Metropolitan church choir, of Victoria, is arranging the whole splendid program and bringing his concert party out for the occasion. A number of the performers need no introduction to Sidney. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons, Mr. Bryant and Mr. Percy Edmonds having been in more than one concert party in Sidney. Mr. Edmonds also won the gold medal two years running in Vancouver at the Musical Festival.

The Institute has made the admission fee as low as possible in hopes of getting a full house to meet Mr. Parsons and party. A portion of the profits will be donated to the Women's Institute Crippled Children's fund, which is doing such splendid work among the unfortunate children.

WEEKLY NEWS BUDGET FROM JAMES ISLAND

John Lyons Victim of Explosion in Victoria High School—Escapes With Minor Injuries

(Review Correspondent)

JAMES ISLAND, Oct. 28.—We were all very sorry to hear of the accident at Victoria high school to John Lyons, the eldest son of our popular superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Lyons. John was the victim of an explosion, in the chemistry class, bad enough to necessitate his admission to the hospital, where he was attended by Dr. F. Pollock. At first it was thought that John's eyes were affected and that an operation on his thumb would be necessary, but, fortunately for him, his eyes were alright, and with care his thumb soon will be alright, and we are pleased to state he is well enough on the way to recovery to be brought home one day this week.

Mrs. E. L. Allen spent a long week-end in Victoria as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Were.

The "Polar Forcite," with Captain Bissett and her engineer on board, towed the "White Cloud" to Vancouver last week for repairs. The "Polar Forcite" returned in time for week-end passengers, much to the relief of most of them. Nobody likes the C.X.L. in rough weather, and nobody envies Mr. Gold, who was in charge of her.

There is to be a masquerade dance here on Saturday, Nov. 1.

Miss Doris Bowker is home for a week.

Sunday school commenced on Sunday with quite a good attendance, but there were a few about who should have been there, we hope all children will turn up next Sunday. There is no age limit at this school.

The women's bowling club seems to hang back this season, so far only fifteen names are down for it.

At the whist drive last Wednesday the prize winners were Mrs. W. Rivers and Mr. W. Thomas.

Miss Kathleen Whalen was home for the week-end.

Joan Gould, who has been on the sick list for the past two weeks, is well again.

Mrs. (Captain) Bissett, Mrs. Hughes and daughter, Effie, spent the day here last Thursday as the guests of Mrs. A. Dakin.

RAISING FUR- BEARING ANIMALS

The report in our last issue under Saturna Island news that Tumbo Island had been sold to Dr. Baker, we understand, is incorrect. The island has been bought by Messrs. J. A. Hird & Son and Wm. Beckman, of Vancouver, for the purpose of raising foxes and other fur-bearing animals.

These gentlemen have other properties, one at Nelson Island of about 1,000 acres and 2,000 acres at Pitt Lake, both well stocked with these industrious little animals and figure they have in the neighborhood of 2,500 to 5,000 muskrats.

There is a steady demand for these animals for breeding purposes outside of the fur value, which is of good quality and profitable. This is a kind of industry the farmers should get interested in as it pays much larger profits than most farm stock and net a good return for the investment.

AT THE AUDITORIUM

"HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND"

"As a movie, "Her Temporary Husband," which will be shown at the Auditorium theatre this week, has all the earmarks of a true fight picture.

Not only does it look like considerable damage was done to heads and bodies but the hospital score card at the First National studios showed that no less than four were treated for serious cuts and bruises during the making of the picture.

First was Chuck Reisner, playing the role of a heavy, whose head stopped a chair. The chair was a "breakaway," built for the movies, Chuck's head. He received a gash on his forehead two inches long, and he was dazed for two hours.

Charlie Gerrard, also a villain, wielded the chair that struck Chuck, but it wasn't his fault.

No more his fault than it was Owen Moore's when he smashed a vase over Gerrard's head. Gerrard had two stitches taken in his head from the crash—and the vase was still unbroken!

Victim No. 3 was George Cooper, also a villain. When his head stopped a statue, thrown at him in one of the general free-for-all fights, he was knocked over by it. When he finally was helped to his feet he had a black eye and a superficial cut near the same eye. He also went to the hospital.

So when a fellow gets hit in the movies you don't know whether it really hurt or not, but it's safe to bet that being the target is not very much fun.

NOTES BY THE WAY

By "Observer"

One of the local sportsmen recently published an article in which he stated that he was trying to get another sportsman to offer a prize for the largest number of cats' tails handed in after the hunting season had expired. The cats so destroyed to be bird-killing animals. The gentleman in question had better think this matter over before he lets loose a scheme that will cause lots of trouble and annoyance to all people who have a domestic cat. Men and boys who enter for this contest will not be particular whether the cat killed is a bird-killer or not. The destruction of domestic animals of this nature will be very dangerous, as a 22 calibre rifle in the hands of boys is a very dangerous weapon. In the opinion of many this suggestion of our local sporting friend is a very dangerous one, and he had better pause and think the matter over, before it is too late.

Quite a number of cases of scarlet fever is now in evidence all over the province. At present the cases are mostly of a very mild type, but every precaution should be taken by parents in cases where children are ailing. Prevention is better than cure, and the effects of scarlet fever is apt, if precautions are not taken, to continue throughout ones whole life.

The demise of the Interurban branch of the B.C. Electric Railway takes effect Friday evening. But as this is All Hallowe'en Night it will hardly be noticed in this locality. And in a few days we will forget it ever existed as far as this part of the Peninsula is concerned.

The Rum Runners of B.C., who graduated from the Gasoline Boat Class to that of owners of steamships are having a hard time of it. With the Yankee Customs and Preventative and the Canadian Customs Authorities they are losing money fast. Just think what a benefit to this country it would have been if the money sunk in this trade was used in building factories, etc., for our young people. The money invested in the S.S. Quadra, together with its cargo, would have built and financed a very large factory. Many aliens in our midst have made money in this trade, but the day of big money seems to be over, and they will soon leave the local people to hold the bag, while they slip away.

When is a "bootlegger" respectable? A short time ago a party of ladies were discussing the local bootlegging question. On the suggestion being made that one of them should be stopped from doing business, the ladies present were greatly surprised when one of them said: "Why stop him, he carries on a very respectable trade and only sells to respectable people?" What do you think?

The Dept. of Indian Affairs have decided to appoint a nurse to help out the medical officer in charge of the Saanich Indians. This seems to be a proof that the action taken by the local Board of Trade and others re the health of the Indians in this locality were well founded, although strongly resented by the local authorities at the time. This seems a proof that there is no reason to try to hide the facts of a case. Better investigate and remedy if possible.

Many property owners are up in arms re the hunting question, and if the actions of some of the hunters do not improve it is likely that a petition may be forwarded to the Local Government to close North Saanich on Sundays to all hunters. All the adjoining municipalities are closed, so all the hunters make a break for North Saanich. Of course we will hear some more hot air about the "poor working man's pleasure," but the "poor working man" in this case is very seldom the culprit. The man who can come out in a high-powered car seems to be the worst offender. Let all hunters take notice, and do not kill the goose that lays the golden egg, even if they try to kill game birds.

"Child's Eyelids Inflamed Stuck Together and Bled"

Mr. E. P. Kimball, Entwistle, Alta., writes: "Our little girl from birth was troubled with inflamed eyelids and in spite of several remedies, grew worse until at the age of sixteen months her eyes could not be opened after sleep without bleeding, a waxy discharge sticking the lids together and adhering with great tenacity. The child's grandmothers were consulted by mail, and both responded with a little sample box of Dr. Chase's Ointment. These were used as directed, and lasted until we could obtain a further supply from Edmonton. Improvement was very marked from the first application. The waxy discharge was easier removed and did not reappear. Inflammation subsided and has not returned."

In The Dauphine

They turned back into the room and breakfasted. Then Linforth lit his pipe and once more curled himself up in his rug upon the straw. Shere Ali followed his example. And it was of the wider plans that they at once began to talk.

"But Heaven only knows when I shall get out to India!" cried Linforth after a while. "There am I at Chatham, and not a chance, so far as I can see, of getting away. You will go back first."

It was significant that Linforth, who had never been in India, none the less spoke habitually of going back to it, as though that country in truth was his native soil.

Shere Ali shook his head.

"I shall wait for you," he said. "You will come out there." He raised himself upon his elbow, and glanced at his friend's face. Linforth had retained the delicacy of feature, the fineness of outline which ten years before had called forth the admiration of Colonel Dewes. But the ten years had also added a look of quiet strength. A man can hardly live with a definite purpose very near to his heart without gaining some reward from the labor of his thoughts. Though he speak never so little, people will be aware of him as they are not aware of the loudest chatterer in the room. Thus it was with Linforth. He talked with no greater wit than his companions, he made no greater display of ability, he never outshone, and yet not a few men were conscious of a force underlying his quietude of manner. Those men were the old and the experienced; the unobservant overlooked him altogether.

"Yes," said Shere Ali, "since you want to come you will come."

"I shall try to come," said Linforth, simply. "We belong to the Road," and for a little while he lay silent. Then in a low voice he spoke, quoting from that page which was as a picture in his thoughts.

"Over the passes! Over the snow passes to the foot of the Hindu Kush!"

"Then and then only India will be safe," the young Prince of Chiltistan added, speaking solemnly, so that the words seemed a kind of ritual.

And to both they were no less. Long before, when Shere Ali was first brought into his room, on his first day at Etou, Linforth had seen his opportunity, and seized it. Shere Ali's father retained his kingdom, with an English Resident at his elbow. Shere Ali would in due time succeed. Linforth had quietly put forth his powers to make Shere Ali his friend, to force him to see with his eyes, and to believe what he believed. And Shere Ali had been easily persuaded.

He had become one of the white men, he proudly told himself. Here was a proof, the surest of proofs. The belief in the Road—that was one of the beliefs of the white men, one of the beliefs which marked him off from the natives, not merely in Chiltistan, but throughout the East. To the white man, the Road was the beginning of things; to the Oriental, the shadow of the end. Shere Ali sided with the white men. He, too, had faith in the Road, and he was proud of his faith because he shared it with the white men.

"We shall be very glad of these expeditions, some day, in Chiltistan," said Linforth.

Shere Ali stared. "It was for that reason—?" he asked.

"Yes."

Shere Ali was silent for a while. Then he said, and with some regret: "There is a great difference between us. You can wait and wait. I want everything done within the year."

Linforth laughed. He knew very well the impulsiveness of his friend.

"If a few miles, or even a few furlongs, stand to my credit at the end, I shall not think that I have failed."

They were both young, and they talked with the bright and simple faith in their ideals which is the great gift of youth. An older man might have laughed if he had heard, but had there been an older man in the hut to overhear them, he would have heard nothing. They were alone, save for their guides, and the whole purpose for which—as they then thought—their lives were to be spent was made that long day short as a summer's night.

"The Government will thank us when the work is done," said Shere Ali, enthusiastically.

"The Government will be in no hurry to let us begin," replied Linforth, dryly. "There is a Resident at your father's court. Your father is willing, and yet there's not a coolie on the Road."

"Yes, but you will get your way," and again confidence rang in the voice of the Chilti prince.

"It will not be I," answered Linforth. "It will be the Road. The Power of the Road is beyond the Power of any Government."

"Yes, I remember and I understand," Shere Ali lit his pipe and lay back among the straw. "At first I did not understand what the words meant. Now I know. The Power of the Road is great, because it inspires men to strive for its completion."

"Or its mastery," said Linforth, slowly. "Perhaps one day, on the other side of the Hindu Kush, the Russians may covet it—and then the Road will go on to meet them."

"Something will happen," said Shere Ali. "At all events, something will happen."

The shadows of the evening found them still debating what complication might force the hand of those in authority. But always they came back to the Russians and a movement in troops in the Pamirs. Yet unknown to both of them, the something else had already happened, though its consequences were not yet to be foreseen. A storm had delayed them for a day in a hut upon the Meije. They went out of the hut. The sky had cleared; and in the sunset the steep buttress of the Promontoire ran sharply up to the Great Wall; above the wall the small square patch of ice sloped to the base of the Grand Pic, and beyond the gap behind that pinnacle the long serrated ridge ran out to the right, rising and falling, to the Doigt de Dieu.

There were some heavy icicles overhanging the Great Wall, and Linforth looked at them anxiously. There was also still a little snow upon the rocks.

"It will be possible," said Peter, cheerily. "Tomorrow night we shall sleep in La Grave."

"Yes, yes. Of course," said his brother.

They walked round the hut, looked for a little while down the stony valley des Etancons, with its one green patch up which they had toiled from La Berarde the day before, and returned to watch the purple flush of the sunset die off the crags of the Meije.

But the future they had planned was as a vision before their eyes, and even along the high cliffs of the Dauphine the road they were to make seemed to wind and climb.

"It would be strange," said Linforth, "if old Andrew Linforth were still alive—somewhere in your country, perhaps in Kohara, waiting for the thing he dreamed to come to pass! He would be an old man now, but he might still be alive."

"I wonder," said Shere Ali, absently, and he suddenly turned to Linforth. "Nothing must come between us," he cried almost fiercely. "Nothing to hinder what we shall do together."

He was the more emotional of the two. The dreams to which they had given utterance had uplifted him.

"That's all right," said Linforth, and he turned back into the hut. But he remembered afterwards that it was Shere Ali who had protested against the possibility of their association being broken.

They came out from the hut again at half-past three in the morning and looked up to a cloudless starlit sky which faded in the east to the color of pearl. Above their heads some knobs of rock stood out upon the thin crest of the buttress against the sky. In the darkness of a small "couloir" underneath the knobs Peter was already ascending. The traverse of the Meije, even for an experienced mountaineer, is a long day's climb. They reached the summit of the Grand Pic in seven hours, descended into the Breche Zsigmondy, climbed up the precipice on the further side of that gap, and reached the Pic Central by two o'clock in the afternoon. There they rested for an hour, and looked far down to the village of La Grave among the cornfields of the valley. There was no reason for any hurry.

"We shall reach La Grave by eight," said Peter; but he was wrong, as they soon discovered. A slope which should have been soft snow down which they could plunge was hard ice, in which a ladder of steps must be cut before the glacier could be reached. The glacier itself was crevassed so that many a detour was necessary, and occasionally a jump; and evening came upon them while they were on the Rocher de l'Aigle. It was quite dark when at last they reached the grass slopes, and still far below them the lights were gleaming in La Grave. To both men these grass slopes seemed interminable. The lights of La Grave seemed never to come nearer, never to grow larger. Little points of fire very far away—as they had been at first, so they remained. But for the slope of ground beneath his feet and the aching of his knees, Linforth could almost have believed that they were not descending at all. He struck a match and looked at his watch, and saw that it was after nine; and a little while after they had come to water and taken their fill of it, that it was nearly ten. But the low thunder of the river in the valley was now louder in his ears, and then suddenly he saw that the lights of La Grave were bright and near at hand.

Linforth flung himself down upon the grass, and clasping his hands behind his head, gave himself up to the cool of the night and the stars overhead.

"I could sleep here," he said. "Why should we go down to La Grave to-night?"

"There is a dew falling. It will be cold when the morning breaks. And La Grave is very near. It is better to go," said Peter.

The question was still in debate when above the roar of the river there came to their ears a faint throbbing sound from across the valley. It grew louder and suddenly two blinding lights flashed along the hill-side opposite.

"A motor-car," said Shere Ali, and as he spoke the lights ceased to travel.

"It's stopping at the hotel," said Linforth, carelessly.

"No," said Peter. "It has not reached the hotel. Look, not by a hundred yards. It has broken down."

Linforth discussed the point at length, not because he was at all interested at the moment in the movements of that or any other motor-car, but because he wished to stay where he was. Peter, however, was obstinate. It was his pride to get his patron indoors each night.

"Let us go on," he said, and Linforth wearily rose to his feet.

"We are making a big mistake," he grumbled, and he spoke with more truth than he was aware.

They reached the hotel at half-past ten, ordered their supper and bathed. It was eleven before Linforth and Shere Ali entered the long dining-room, and they found another party already supping there. Linforth heard himself greeted by name, and turned in surprise. It was a party of four—two ladies and two men. One of the men had called to him, an elderly man with a bald forehead, a grizzled moustache, and a shrewd kindly face.

"I remember you, though you can't say as much of me," he said. "I came down to Chatham a year ago and dined at your mess as the guest of your colonel."

Linforth came forward with a smile of recognition.

"I beg your pardon for not recognizing you at once, I remember you, of course, quite well," he said.

"Who am I, then?"

"Sir John Casson, late Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces," said Linforth, promptly.

"And now nothing but a bore at my club," replied Sir John, cheerfully. "We were motoring through to Grenoble, but the car has broken down. You are mountaineering, I suppose. Phyllis," and he turned to the younger of the two ladies, "this is Mr. Linforth of the Royal Engineers. My daughter, Linforth!" He introduced the second lady.

"Mrs. Oliver," he said, and Linforth, turning, saw that the eyes of Mrs. Oliver were already fixed upon him. He returned the look, and his eyes frankly showed her that he thought her beautiful.

"And what are you going to do with yourself?" said Sir John.

"Go to the country from which you have just come as soon as I can," said Linforth with a smile. At this moment the fourth of the party, a stout, red-faced, plethoric gentleman, broke in.

"India!" he exclaimed indignantly. "Bless my soul, what on earth sends all you young fellows racing out to went to India myself—to shoot a tiger. I stayed there for months and never saw one. Not a tiger, sir!"

But Linforth was paying very little attention to the plethoric gentleman. Sir John introduced him as Colonel Fitzwarren, and Linforth bowed politely. Then he asked of Sir John:

"Your car was not seriously damaged, I suppose?"

"Keep us here two days," said Sir John. "The chauffeur will have to go on by diligence to-morrow to get a new sparking plug. Perhaps we shall see more of you in consequence."

Linforth's eyes travelled back to Mrs. Oliver.

"We are in no hurry," he said slowly. "We shall rest here probably for a day or so. May I introduce my friend?"

He introduced him as the son of the Khan of Chiltistan, and Mrs. Oliver's eyes, which had been quietly resting upon Linforth's face, turned toward Shere Ali, and as quietly rested upon his.

"Then, perhaps, you can tell me, sir," said Colonel Fitzwarren, "how it was I never saw a tiger in India, though I stayed there four months. A most disappointing country, I call it. I looked for a tiger everywhere, and I never saw one—not one."

The Colonel's one idea of the Indian Peninsula was a huge tiger waiting somewhere in a jungle to be shot.

But Shere Ali was paying no more attention to the Colonel's disparagements than Linforth had done.

"Will you join us at supper?" said Sir John, and both young men replied simultaneously: "We shall be very pleased."

Sir John Casson smiled. He could never quite be sure whether it was or was not to Mrs. Oliver's credit that her looks made so powerful an appeal to the chivalry of young men.

"All young men immediately want to protect her," he was wont to say, "and their trouble is that they can't find any one to protect her from."

He watched Shere Ali and Dick Linforth with a sly amusement, and as a result of his watching promised himself yet more amusement during the next two days. He was roused from this pleasing anticipation by his choleric friend, Colonel Fitzwarren, who, without the slightest warning, flung a loud and defiant challenge across the table to Shere Ali.

"I don't believe there is one," he cried, and breathed heavily.

Shere Ali interrupted his conversation with Mrs. Oliver. "One what?" he asked with a smile.

"Tiger, sir, tiger!" said the Colonel, rapping with his knuckles upon the table. "Of what else should I be speaking? I don't believe there's a tiger in India outside the Calcutta Zoo. Otherwise, why didn't I see one?"

Colonel Fitzwarren glared at Shere Ali as though he held him personally responsible for that unhappy mission. Sir John intervened with smooth speeches, and for the rest of supper the conversation was kept to less painful topics. But the Colonel had not said his last word. As they went upstairs to their rooms, he turned to Shere Ali, who was just behind him, and sighed heavily.

"If I had shot a tiger in India," he said, with an indescribable look of pathos upon his big red face, "it would have made a great difference to my life."

CHAPTER VIII.

A String of Pearls

"So you go to parties nowadays!" said Mrs. Linforth, and Sir John Casson, leaning his back against the wall of the ball-room, puzzled his brains for the name of the lady with the pleasant winning face to whom he had just been introduced. At first it had seemed to him merely that her hearing was better than his. The "nowadays," however, showed that it was her memory which had the advantage. They were apparently old acquaintances; and Sir John belonged to an old-fashioned school which thought it discourteous to forget even the least memorable of his acquaintances.

"You were not so easily persuaded to decorate a ball-room at Mussoorie," Mrs. Linforth continued.

Sir John smiled, and there was a little bitterness in the smile.

"Ah!" he said, and there was a hint, too, of bitterness in his voice. "I was wanted to decorate ball-rooms then. So I didn't go. Now I am not wanted. So I do."

"That's not the true explanation," Mrs. Linforth said gently, and she shook her head. She spoke so gently and with so clear a note of sympathy and comprehension that

Long Distance Calls Are Cheaper When Made at Night

Under the new scale of night rates for long-distance conversations the charge between 8.30 p.m. and 7 a.m. is the lowest in the history of this Company. The new rates are on a basis of approximately twice, and in some cases, three times, the day period, at two-thirds the day rate.

One long-distance conversation will often do more in expediting business than the exchange of a number of letters. Speed is one of the principal advantages of long-distance, and the effect of personal contact by wire is also valuable. While long-distance has for years proven its worth as a servant of business, it has its place in the social sphere as well, for a chat by wire between distant friends is most enjoyable, and arrangements regarding visits and other matters are speedily made through the long-distance service.

The rate clerk would be glad to answer any inquiries.

RUDE RURAL RHYMES

DRAFTED

Our house had company galore the evening of the day before. We fed them well for Hannah built a noble cake with frosting gilded, and friends, away from home somewhere, had left their strawberries in our care.
Next morning Jim desired to know "Where did the dirty dishes go?" "Last night," said I "we washed them good, I helped your mother all I could." Jim said, surprised I took the task, "Did you just go or did she ask?"
Whereat my wife was much delighted—to tell the truth
I'd been invited. Sure, you may laugh and crack a snort, but I'm no worse than you at that. In city, country, county, village are fields of life in need of Ullage. Some towns have schools that they've forgotten and some have streets with paving rotten. Our land has use for you and me to make her what she ought to be. But we alas still stop our ears to every call for volunteers.
Some folks won't even vote and yet they cuss the officers they get. It takes a lot of husky shoveling to keep the car of progress moving. She'd do a lot of fancy gliding if some would push who now are riding. But even if you keep your seat, for Pete's sake come to drag your feet.

HOW TO CORN BEEF

The process consists in cutting the meat into convenient sized pieces, say five or six inches square, then weighing it. For each 100 pounds of meat use 10 pounds of salt.

First, sprinkle a layer of salt about one-quarter of an inch in depth, over the bottom of the barrel, then pack in closely the cuts of meat, making a layer of five or six inches thick, and put on another layer of salt. Continue this until the meat and salt have been packed, care being used to preserve enough salt to put on top.

Allow the meat to stand in the salt over night and then pour over it a solution made as follows: For each 100 pounds of meat, use four pounds of sugar, two ounces of salt-petre, dissolved in boiling water.
Cool and add three gallons more of water, which should be sufficient to cover this quantity of meat. Put a loose board over the meat and weigh it down with a stone. All the meat should be under the brine.

The meat should be kept in the brine for 20 or 30 days to secure thorough corning.

Here and There

Immigration to Canada for the month of August, 1924, totalled 20-186, of whom 5,706 were from the British Isles, 1,734 from the United States, and 12,696 from other countries. Immigration for the first five months of the fiscal year totalled 76,719. In the same period 23,861
Canadians have returned to Canada from domicile in the United States.

As an indication that the tide of settlers has definitely set in the direction of Canada, it has been made known by the Department of Immigration and Colonization that 5,000 acres of land near Lethbridge has been sold to ten families of 75 persons from South Dakota. This, it is announced, is only the advance guard of a considerable northward movement from that region.

"We will have a good report to present when we reach the Hebrides," said Rev. Father Alex. Mac-Do-gall, a member of the Hebridean commission of inquiry which investigated conditions of Hebrideans in Canada. The members of the commission, after visiting Alberta, reported the new settlers perfectly satisfied with Canadian conditions.

Among the passengers sailing for Europe aboard the Canadian Pacific Steamship "Empress of France" on October 8th, was Geo. A. Walton, General Passenger Agent, Canadian Pacific Railway, Montreal, who will represent the company on an extensive tour of Europe arranged for the American Association of Passenger Traffic Officers by the trans-Atlantic steamship companies and Charles J. Pernigotti, a native of Danbury, Conn., has received a commission from the Prince of Wales to paint some of his blooded stock on the E. P. ranch, near High River, on the Canadian Pacific lines in Alberta. Pernigotti, who has attained a reputation as a painter of animals, says the commission was awarded during the Prince's stay at Syosset.

He will commence work the latter part of October.

As a result of the survey conducted by the newly formed Graphic Arts Association, printing and allied trades are now shown to constitute the second largest industry in Winnipeg, Man., representing an investment of $10,054,318, and providing employment for 12,000 people. The report shows that during 1923 the sum of $3,610,322 was paid in salaries.

With the approaching close of the tourist season, plans are being laid for the continuation of construction work at the Chateau Frontenac, the Canadian Pacific Railway's palatial hotel in the city of Quebec. Some of the interior decorating and the completion of rooms of the main corridor in the Chateau had to be left unfinished when the present tourist season opened, but it is expected that work on these parts of the hotel will commence very shortly. The billiard room and other rooms in the basement will also be completed as soon as possible.

NUT INDUSTRY IN B.C.

The Dominion department of agriculture stated recently that the "nut growing industry in British Columbia is becoming an important one."
B. C. growers have declared that the experimental stage of nut culture in this province is past, and that an educational campaign is now required to bring before the settlers the remunerative possibilities of this branch of farming. In British Columbia and other parts of Canada, Canada is importing nuts annually to the extent of nearly $5,000,000 from the United Kingdom, the United States, Italy, France, Spain.

ADVERTISING PAYS

The merchant who does not advertise is as far behind the times as the old-time stage coach. He plods along in the same old way, year after year, while the more progressive merchant places his wares before the public and increases his business year by year. Persistent advertising has made millions for many progressive merchants, who recognized the value of advertising from the first day they commenced business. The Review goes into almost every home in the district and is the proper medium for reaching the people.

A splendid attendance was noted at the semi-monthly card party given by the West Saanich Women's Institute on Wednesday evening in the Institute hall, Sluggetts. Ten tables were engaged by the players in the game of Military 500 and 30 flags were secured by the winning table. The players were: Miss F. Woodward and Messrs. E. Buckle, A. Guy and E. Gosselin. Second prize winners were: Mrs. Arthur Petch, Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Rochon and Mr. R. Crawford, while the following three players were given consolation: Mrs. Walker, Mr. H. Bond and Mr. F. Richardson. Delicious refreshments were served and an informal program of music enjoyed.

Grow-ups, too, will be given a cordial welcome and no doubt there will be many who will enjoy seeing the young folks in their fancy costumes. The parents will assist in supper arrangements and music, games, and other amusements will be offered. Prizes are being offered as follows: Best national, best comic, best advertisement, best nursery rhyme character, including fairies and witches; best season or flower costume and best dressed.
